Purpose

The Australasian College of Tropical Medicine Inc is the pre-eminent organisation in Australia and the region, representing professional interests in tropical medicine and promotes the highest ethical and professional standards through education and information. It has both regional and global interests with more than 400 members coming from over 30 countries around the world and maintains links to three international organisations working in tropical medicine. Membership includes medical doctors, scientists, academics, military personnel, consultants, and other health professionals. Several committees and sub-groups within the College assist in organising local and regional scientific meetings, as well as other professional activities.

Mission

The College is committed to the development of tropical medicine and is working with professionals to help manage the global burden of tropical disease and injury through networking research and development.

The aims of the college are to:

- Encourage continuing education and the exchange of knowledge in tropical medicine;
- Collaborate with other organisations in conducting activities of mutual concern, interest and direction in tropical medicine;
- Promote research in tropical medicine;
- Strive for professionalism and competence among its members and those specialising in and entering into the field of tropical medicine; and
- Maintain in historical collection of items relevant to the development of tropical medical in Australia.

History

The Australasian College of Tropical Medicine Inc (ACTM) was founded at a meeting in Townsville, Australia on 29 May 1991. Membership now extends to all states of Australia, and overseas. Membership includes many eminent professionals working in various fields relating to tropical medicine, such as parasitology, infectious diseases and tropical veterinary science, reflecting the broadest definition of tropical medicine. The College was incorporated in Queensland in 1994. The original secretariat was based at the Anton Breinl Centre, James Cook University - in the building used for the Australian Institute for Tropical Medicine established in 1910. A Faculty of Travel Medicine was launched in 2001. Further details on Faculty membership are available from the ACTM Secretariat.
